

We know we've gone too far when the clothes you wear outlive you. Fast fashion popularisation has taken over, resulting in unsustainable materials that are non-biodegradable. If you were buried in a garment, you'd decay before it, leaving behind a hollow, preserved outfit molded to the shape of your body. I highlight this eerie reality by creating a collection that resembles fossilised fast fashion landfills. The textiles I have created display peaks of repurposed, defective and donated fast fashion clothes trapped under fabricated rocks. In the hope of targeting a chuck-out culture, this outfit repurposes thrown-away fast fashion items into an artisanal piece that you hopefully cherish.

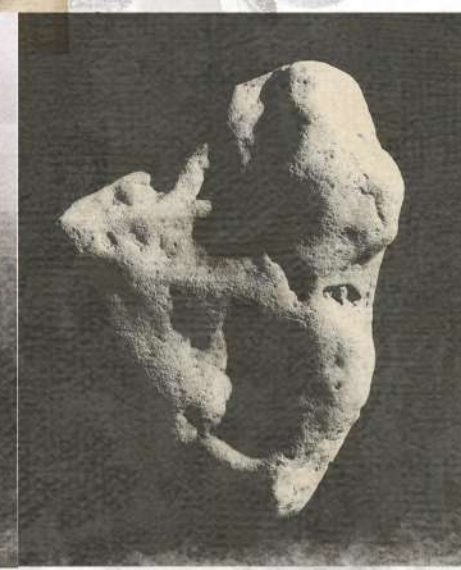

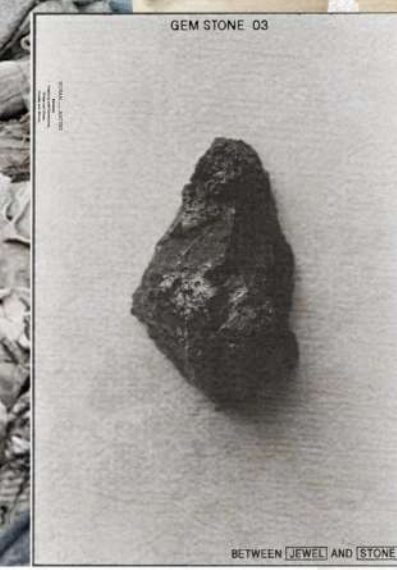

cut into layers
holes in shape of
reveal fast fashion garment

rock shaped drape

make longer

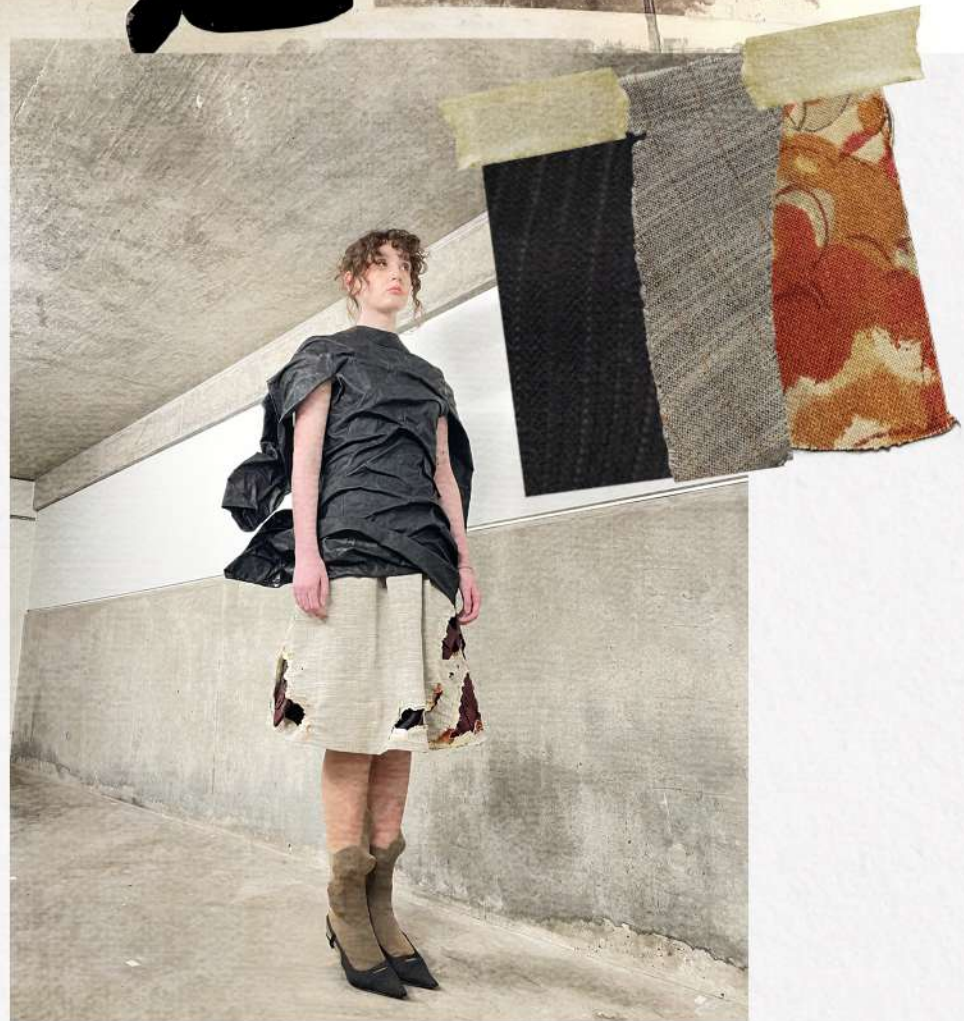

trapped shirt

trapped collar

Seams like cracked rocks

fossilised

flat on the back

moulded flat on floor

